| Abstract | Effective knowledge transfer requires the participation of stakeholders. Communication between researchers and stakeholders has to be managed to ensure that: I. new RTD strategies and innovations are relevant to industry needs; II. stakeholder's perspectives are taken into account in the development of the research programme. A stakeholder platform, composed of up to 3 members per participating country, has been formed to represent the interests of the target end user groups. Partners have identified the key stakeholders of diverse types and with different interests for each participating country, ensuring gender and group balance and promoting inclusion of crop producers, small dairy farms/dairy operators. Selected stakeholders have been invited to participate to the platform on a voluntary basis. They have the possibility to interact with the platform, to share information and other resources (e.g. using different tools that will be made available on the project website, such as interviews, surveys, etc.) and to receive updated information/news about the project and its progresses and main outcomes. |
